DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Orkney Springs is situated at the base of the Alleghany Mountains in Shenan-doah County. The complex occupies a small natural basin and is remarkably unchanged since the turn of the last century. The great four-story hotel and its annex face the village's Main Street. A two-story ante-bellum hotel sits to the north side of the street, and behind this, the mineral springs filter into a placid lake. A long cottage row, without which no summer resort would be complete, rests to the east of the hotel structures.

The oldest structure in the hotel complex, Maryland House, constructed in 1853, is a two-story rectangular frame structure covered with stucco and surrounded on each face by a double gallery. The galleries are supported by simple, tapered Greek Revival box columns. Access to each room is gained by doors leading directly to the galleries. The window sashes are nine-oversix. Outside stairs provide access to the second floor of the hotel. Originally, a covered walkway above the road connected Maryland House to the main hotel.

Virginia House, the main hotel structure, built between 1873 and 1876, is an immense wooden pile, 100'x 165, four stories in height, containing 175 bedrooms. The building is constructed in an H-shape; the front wing is elevenbays long and five-bays wide with a pedimented, projecting central bay. A simple hipped roof is used. A three-story veranda, supported by slender chamfered posts, extending around the front wing of the structure, accents the height of the building. Its railings consist of sawn-work typical of the period. A two-story gallery projects from the central bay to act as protection for guests to pass from the street to the front door.

Virginia House, part of which is abandoned, retains an echo of its former elegance. The complex's main dining room contained within is graced by a double row of square columns; at the back of the room is an elevated musicians' gallery. A fountain once dominated the center of the room. On the third floor of Virginia House is a grand ballroom, 50' x 100' with 18' ceilings. The ballroom occupies the entire front wing on the third floor of the building. Because of recent fire regulations, the third and fourth floors of Virginia House are no longer used. The building still has only one room per floor with a private bath; a larger bath serves the other fifty rooms on each floor.

The interiors of Virginia House are severely plain. The door and window moldings are typical of the period. Each door has six flat panels with applied moldings. The parlors on the second floor are 50' square and have oversized sliding doors for access. The lobby retains a massive oak reception desk with the mail slots for each room and cottage behind it.

Virginia House was designed as a summer hotel; the oversized windows, high ceilings and long corridor with rooms on both sides allowed the cool mountain air to act as a natural air-conditioning system.

Pennsylvania House, crected in 1867 is now the annex for Virginia House and, like Maryland House, is of timber construction covered with stucco and a hipped roof. Pennsylvania House is three stories and it, too, is surrounded (see continuation sheet # 1) on each face by open galleries supported by tapered box columns. The window sashes are nine-over-six, and each room opens directly on to the galleries. A two-story covered passage and stair connect the Virginia and Maryland buildings. (Collectively, the galleries at Orkney Springs measure 2,999 feet in length.)

The spa's cottage row consists of seven identical two-story, six-room, hipped-roof cottages with two-story corner porches. The eaves are decorated with sawn-work barge boards.

Behind Maryland House are the mineral springs. Beside the lake stands a small columned pavilion three-bays long and one-bay wide with a hipped roof and a cupola. Of the springs, the largest is Bear Wallow.

Orkney Springs is one of the last and is the most complete of the mineral spas that sprang up so freely in western Virginia in the nineteenth century. Its history reads like a turn-of-the-century novel extolling the virtues of the "Old South." In the two decades 1870-1890 Orkney ranked among the Commonwealth's most famous spas. A brochure of 1885 describes the various springs as containing sulphur, alum, arsenic, chalybeate and iron sulphur, and healing springs, and guarantees relief from dyspepsia, chronic diarrheal and female diseases. And the final attraction for the summer of 1885 was the presence of a "first class" string and brass band. And even today if one were to walk the village's Main Street from October to April, the most interesting item would be a Virginia State Department of Health sign declaring the water at Orkney to be healthful for both the body and the palate.

Before 1800 the local farmers would gather at the then-undeveloped springs after the harvest to "enjoy the waters." By 1833 the population had expanded and a small community of log cabins was incorporated to form the town of Van Burenville. Later larger hotels and cottages grew in response to the rising demand of people to take the waters. A photograph now in the archives of the Virginia Historical Society shows one of the earliest hotel structures as a weatherboarded building, five-bays long with a wood shingle roof and no visible chimneys, indicating its use only as a summer hotel. The first-floor windows were filled with louvers instead of glass.

In 1845 Henry Howe in writing his history of Virginia visited Orkney Springs and described it as having "waters composed of several lively springs and are strongly chalybeate. Everything the water passes through or over, is beautifully lined with a bright yellow fringe or moss." An ante-bellum proprietor, Mr. A. R. Seymour, advertised Orkney in 1850 as a "Sylvan Retreat."

In the years before the Civil War the springs were well known for frequent jousting tournaments. By 1900 the entertainment had been reduced to more sedate forms of frivolity that included "glass ball and clay pigeon tournaments, foot racing, gander pulling and grease pole racing."

It was in the space of time after 1865 and the swift move into the modern age that Orkney experienced its greatest popularity. Visiting the springs had become an expanding habit for more affluent Southerners. Routes were published presenting the easiest journeys by rail from every major point in the South and East. Regular stage service sprang up in Mount Jackson (see continuation sheet # 2) to accommodate the travelers on the final ten-mile excursion to the springs. By then the complex at Orkney contained three large hotels, seven cottages, stables, a bowling alley, and every possible outdoor sport, with a capacity to accommodate 750 people. Rates were $10-$15 by the week, $30-$50 by the month with the finest rooms at a substantial $56 monthly. Children were admitted at half price.

Like so many of its sister resorts, Orkney Springs declined precipitously towards the turn of the century. But as fire, abandonment, and neglect reduced these once popular spas to overgrown fields, Orkney managed to survive. It found its doors open once again, not as a haven for families escaping from the heat of the cities, but as a summer music camp for Virginia high school bands, and as a location for an internationally known symphony symposium.

DESCRIPTION

The acreage being nominated to the National Register consists of the twenty southernmost acres of Parcel One of three large parcels of land comprising the grounds of the hotel. These twenty acres represent merely a fraction of the more-than-one-thousand-acre tract, and in themselves provide an appropriate setting for the large main buildings and the surrounding collection of smaller structures. In addition to the cottage row previously mentioned, the surrounding building assemblage includes a one-story Victorian manager's cottage northeast of the Maryland House and four two-story Victorian guest houses: three situated to the west of the Virginia House and one set directly across Route 263 from the others.

SIGNIFICANCE

Architecturally, Orkney Springs Hotel, consisting of three larger buildings surrounded by an assemblage of accompanying cottages, survives as one of the last complete examples of the Virginia Valley nineteenth-century mineral spring complexes designed for public accommodation. The galleried main buildings (including the antebellum Maryland House (1853)), complemented by seven two-story, hipped-roof cottages with two-storied porches carrying out the multitiered effect of their larger counterparts, reflect the unique atmosphere of the bygone days of spa resort popularity.
